

The Fatal Flaw in Mail-In Ballots That Makes Voter Verification Impossible

July 9, 2026

From the exact moment a mail-in ballot envelope is received, there is no possible way for anyone – or any technology – to determine who, or what, actually filled out that ballot.

This single fact destroys the foundation of mail-in voting.

The signature on the outer envelope, constantly promoted as the primary security measure, verifies absolutely nothing about who marked the votes inside the ballot. It cannot confirm that the registered voter filled out the ballot. It cannot even confirm whether a real, eligible voter had any involvement whatsoever. The ballot and signature could both have been produced by a third party or a machine with zero legitimate voter involvement – and the system has no ability to detect it.

This failure exists immediately upon receipt. The system was designed in a broken state.

The rapid separation of ballots from their envelopes is often used to dismiss later concerns, yet this misses the central truth: there was never any way to verify the voter to begin with. Signature verification and ballot separation are nothing more than security theater.

We have all been lied to.

Election officials, legislators, and the American people have been repeatedly told that mail-in ballots are secure. That claim is demonstrably false.

This becomes even more alarming when viewed through the lens law enforcement uses to evaluate serious crimes – Motive, Means, and Opportunity:

- Motive: Total political power of over 330 million Americans and control of trillions in government spending.
- Means: A system that is structurally incapable of verifying who or what cast any given ballot.
- Opportunity: Mass mail-in ballots aggressively expanded across the entire country.

When all three align around our elections – the highest-value target in the republic – exploitation is not a risk, it is a certainty.

And it is already happening.

- In Mesa County, Colorado, former postal worker Vicki Lyn Stuart was sentenced to five years in prison in June 2025 for stealing ballots, forging voter signatures, and fraudulently submitting mail-in ballots during the 2024 election.
- In Iowa, Kim Phuong Taylor was convicted on 52 counts of voter fraud for filling out and forging signatures on absentee ballots belonging to other people.

- In California, former Lodi City Councilman Shakir Khan was sentenced to three years in jail after authorities discovered dozens of completed mail-in ballots at his home.

These proven cases confirm the system is being actively exploited right now. Yet because of its design, we have no idea how large the fraud actually is because the true scale is completely undetectable and immeasurable.

This is a clear and present danger to the republic.

The continued use of mass mail-in ballots is national suicide. A voting system that cannot verify the identity or even the existence of the voter is not a minor policy issue – it is an existential threat to free and fair elections.

Mass mail-in ballots must be abolished immediately.

Our republic cannot survive if we cannot verify who is actually voting.

Call to Action: Share this article with your state legislators, your sheriff, and your local election officials. Demand the immediate abolition of mass mail-in ballots. The integrity of our elections depends on it.
